Forever England 1935, directed by Walter Forde | Film review

Brown on Resolution (US title: Born for Glory; UK re-issue title: Forever England) is a 1935 film adaptation of the 1929 C. S. Forester novel Brown on Resolution, with John Mills in his first lead role playing the title role. The film is also notable for being the first film to use actual Royal Navy ships. [citation needed] The plot is centred on the illegitimate son of a British naval officer ...

That is for ever England. There shall be In that rich earth a richer dust concealed; A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware, 5 Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam, A body of England's breathing English air, Washed by the rivers, blest by suns of home. And think, this heart, all evil shed away,

The Soldier, by Rupert Brooke

This sonnet encompasses the memoirs of a deceased soldier who declares his patriotism to his homeland by declaring that his sacrifice will be the eternal ownership of England of the small portion of land where his body is buried. The poem appears to not follow the normal purpose of a Petrarchan/Italian sonnet either.

Forever England gives us reasons to re-evaluate the lives and the achievements of women during this era and thereby opens up a fascinating and rewarding new area for feminist research in the United States as well as in Great Britain." Women's Review of Books

Forever England - Alison Light

Alison Light's Forever England is an exception to this rule-of-thumb: a study of critically neglected, 'middlebrow' writers between the wars (including Daphne du Maurier, Agatha Christie, and Ivy Compton-Burnett), Forever England is an engaging, beautifully crafted, lively study of this rather "frowned upon" (at least by fusty, old, almost fossilised professors) area of literary study.
