Ask a question. “The Hollow Men” is a poem by the American modernist poet T.S. Eliot, first published in 1925.

Uncanny and dream-like, “The Hollow Men” describes a desolate world, populated by empty, defeated people. Though the speaker describes these people as “dead” and the world they inhabit as the underworld (“death’s twilight kingdom”), the poem shouldn’t be read simply as a description of life after death.

Lines 24-28: When the Hollow Men try to imagine what Heaven is like, they think of a "tree swinging" in the wind. The wind is personified as "singing."
